The book explores how governments in the transatlantic area are navigating the challenges of maintaining sovereignty in the cyber domain. By examining four cases (the Netherlands, the US, Estonia and Turkey), the author describes the innovative strategies of the states to combine modern technology with legal frameworks.

The author underscores the global competition over cyber governance, emphasizing the critical need for adaptable strategies to ensure national sovereignty in the face of rapid technological advancements.

The book will be available for purchase during the event.
